Nero's story takes place from the events of the film I, Claudius to the events of the film II, Claudius; Vespasian's story takes place from the events of the film II, Claudius to the events of the film IV, The Areopagus. In the case of Paul and Silas, the series' first season contains a film that, in addition to the second half of the television season, comprises the entirety of the "Paul and Silas" miniseries and the first seven episodes of the second season. Later in the cycle, the general rule of thumb is to go from one season of a two-part story to the sequel, rather than to a different two-part story. For example, with the series The Twilight Zone, Season 3 followed the sequel Children of the Twilight Zone, while Season 4 followed the two-part episode "A Small Talent for War", followed by "Rough Georges". The premiere of the series was a double bill, consisting of the two-part episode "Nightmare at 20,000 Feet" followed by the episode "A Stop at Willoughby", so the following season, "Night
